Intercultural Communication Intercultural Communication represents an interdisciplinary field of study. In order to present a variety of theories developed and highlighted at different stages of the formation of Intercultural Communication as a research area in its own right, this seminar aims to approach it from a linguistic, an anthropological, as well as a phenomenological perspective. Special attention will be given to the interactions themselves in which the participants are involved and which might be expressed in multimodal ways. For this purpose, we will bring together modules from conversation analysis, intercultural pragmatics, as well as gesture studies and cultural linguistics. Based on concrete multimodal analysis of interactional sequences, the students learn to analyze how meaning is co-constructed in intercultural communication. Additionally, they will also be introduced to the means by which experiences of alterity are negotiated and categorized (self)reflexively on verbal, prosodic and corporal levels.	Charlotte Schenke

Topics in International Studies II: Introduction to Population Studies

This course is an introduction to contemporary issues that accompany population change and is rooted in demography. Demographers study the size, composition, distribution, and characteristics of populations in areas spanning small towns to countries across the globe. Many demographic processes are familiar to us. In this course, we will pursue four main tasks: 1) Exploring a demographic perspective that connects population to social theories on how the world operates; 2) Learning about an array of demographic measures that characterize population and its changes; 3) Developing a working knowledge of current population trends and movements, along with their socioeconomic determinants and policy implications; 4) Developing critical thinking skills to apply to the presentation of population problems in popular culture and press.
