Global Health and Diplomacy: Operational Concepts and Contemporary Practices This course has a flexible content and intends to focus on health diplomacy as it relates to health issues that transcend national boundaries as well as how they are being addressed by different groups and at different levels of governance.	Ulysses de Barros Panisset
Intercultural Communication Intercultural Communication represents an interdisciplinary field of study. In order to present a variety of theories developed and highlighted at different stages of the formation of Intercultural Communication as a research area in its own right, this seminar aims to approach it from a linguistic, an anthropological, as well as a phenomenological perspective. Special attention will be given to the interactions themselves in which the participants are involved and which might be expressed in multimodal ways. For this purpose, we will bring together modules from conversation analysis, intercultural pragmatics, as well as gesture studies and cultural linguistics. Based on concrete multimodal analysis of interactional sequences, the students learn to analyze how meaning is co-constructed in intercultural communication. Additionally, they will also be introduced to the means by which experiences of alterity are negotiated and categorized (self)reflexively on verbal, prosodic and corporal levels.	Charlotte Schenke

Topics in International Studies IV: International Law, Internet and Human Rights

The course “International Law, Internet and Human Rights” is aimed at discussing the current interplay between International Law, Internet and International Human Rights from the standpoint of international legal studies, international relations and international policy-making. It is mainly focused on the contemporary debate on Internet Governance, its policies and decision-making mechanisms, as well as the distinct patterns concerning Internet regulation and their intersectionalities with human rights online. In this sense, students will be encouraged to discuss in a critical analytical fashion the existing policies and legal issues related to Global Digital Agenda, the access to internet as human right and enforcement of human rights online. Some specific issues are related to the International Law/Internet and HR interface, such as jurisdictional issues; international dispute resolution mechanisms in cross-border internet disputes; protection of freedom of expression and its linkage with misinformation online and ‘fake news’; global internet policies and content enforcement online; online censorship, harmful speech in national and transnational perspectives. The course also devotes part of the teaching units for the critical international legal studies related to porn regulation and internet bans across the globe; right to privacy and right to disconnection as fundamental rights online; the creation of internet global courts and content enforcement in cross-border internet litigation and finally the enforcement of online consumer rights, particularly with regard to intellectual property and emerging issues on liability of Internet service providers. Evaluation assessment will be based on intermediary and write essays, submission of outline presentations and seminars.

Topics in international studies IV: Population Mobility in Latin America in Historical Perspective

The last census round suggests that the Latin’s America mobility pattern is characterised by some long-term continuities, such as the persistency of high rates of emigration, as well as changes in the volume and direction of flows – especially inside the region – and in the composition and characteristics of migrants – ever more diverse in terms of their origins and motives. The lectures and readings of the course will focus on the study of the causes and consequences of international population movements and their multiple social, economic, demographic and political dimensions in Latin America. The students will also learn about the historical and contemporary theoretical and methodological debates in the study of population mobility in the region and the world. Students are expected to be able to critically discuss the dynamics, opportunities and challenges of international population mobility and its political and socioeconomic implications.

Topics in International Studies II: The United States and the World Since 1945

This course contextualizes American history and politics from 1945 to the present into a broader, global history while focusing on the major issues in twentieth-century American history, including political reform and the contest over national identity; the development of feminism, civil rights, and other social movements; and debates over war, the environment, and the role of government. Each week we will read selections from a world perspective and a US perspective.
